

Brose earns two quality awards from FCA US LLC

Auburn Hills, MI (27. July 2016) Brose North America, a technological leader in mechatronics, received two 2015 FCA US Qualitas awards – the Body Quality Supplier of the Year for its door systems and the Overall Supplier of the Year award. The company was the only North American supplier to win two awards from the automaker.

Brose was selected for each of its awards based on input from FCA US senior leadership, as well as its performance in key areas including quality, delivery, cost, warranty and partnership.

“Winning these awards is not only an honor, but a testament to the dedication of all our Brose employees to consistently produce the highest quality products and be a valuable resource to our global partners like FCA US,” said Mike Brosseau, President of Brose North America. “It is the result of a true team effort at all levels of our organization. I am immensely proud of all our Brose North America employees who worked hard to achieve this accomplishment.”

A history of providing quality products

Brose’s relationship with FCA US began in 1999 with the production of window regulators. Today, Brose supplies the automaker with its award-winning door systems, power seat adjusters, manual seat adjuster and cooling fan modules. Globally, Brose products can be found on FCA vehicles such as Jeep® Grand Cherokee, Jeep® Cherokee, Dodge Journey, Jeep® Renegade, Dodge Durango, Fiat 500X and Chrysler Town & Country.

Brose developed the world’s first modular vehicle door in 1987 and has continued to be an industry leader in setting standards for systems integration, material innovation and lightweight design. With strategically placed facilities near customers, the company delivers ready-to-fit door systems within hours of receiving an order.

About Brose
